

I enjoy listening to music. So much so, that I pay a subscription fee and purchased a proprietary delivery system to take advantage of satellite radio.

If the satellite company wants to offer me further convenience by providing localized traffic and weather (on demand, no waiting) why can't they?

I live north of Philadelphia and cannot receive the AM signal for KYW (who also provides traffic reports) in my vehicle. Since I often drive around the whole metro area, it is very convenient to hear a traffic report so I can chose the best route (I95 vs. PA Turnpike).

If a person is willing to pay a premium, why can't they buy what they want. Because this can help relieve traffic, local reports on satellite radio can only help.

Tom McAnulty